Loading your cassette.

Game is recorded on both sides of the cassette.

128k = Side A    48k = Side B

48k ZX Spectrum

Type LOAD "" press ENTER and start the tape.

Note: LOAD is obtained by pressing the J key after turning on your computer, or while the K cursor is flashing.

The "" are obtained by holding symbol shift and pressing the P key twice. There is no space between the "" marks.

128k ZX Spectrum

Please select TAPELOADER option upon switch-on, and start the tape. Game contains AY music for 128k machines.

Loading should be reasonably error free on upper-middle volumes, though if the tape fails at any time during the LOADING process, then please rewind the tape, adjust the volume control (on 48k machines) and try again.

If for any reason the game fails to load after all efforts, then please contact Monument Microgames at:

MultiDude

When you find yourself a million light years away from the familiar sights of Galactic Centre, suddenly cast out into a bleak world of pits, gantries and ladders, it's good to have your friends around you. People often say they're just an existential projection of your own neuroses, but—whether that's the case or not, they're still very useful in situations like this.

Take Jesus for example, floating about above all the dangers. His only concern is not to get trapped by the blocks that are triggered by his passing.

Ivan has got the muscles, heave-ho-ing weights of up to 90 stone without breaking a sweat.

Grinky is a funny one, a bit destructive really, but then he is quite young and is always happiest when he's smashing his way through the floor.

Then there's Einar. What a clever chap, he got a gift that allows him to ...

... what? Running out of time? Oh, but I've not introduced everyone yet. Okay, back over to you. After all, they're your personalities, so who knows them better than you?

Pardon? People still calling you nuts? Hey, what do "people" know? They're probably the ones who don't exist. And I bet they got you / us into this situation in the first place!
